Abstract:

Music can be found in almost anywhere humans are. All people through history have made music for different occasions; death, birth, war, victory celebrations, spiritual rituals, etc. It has been in use for different purposes like curing the sick, improving learning, and even sports. This has raised the question of "what is music to human?"

The article is looking at different sides of music in practice and theory to show why music can be the most complicated activity of humans as species and the key to understand him at the same time.
